

HIGHER EDUCATION ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM

Saint Louis University's higher education administration programs prepare professionals to lead, manage and advance colleges and universities with integrity, competence and a commitment to mission-driven and equitable practice. These programs integrate theory, research and professional application to support effective leadership across diverse postsecondary contexts.

Designed to meet the needs of working professionals and emerging scholars, Higher education administration programs offer flexible pathways aligned with students' career goals and professional responsibilities. Graduates are prepared for leadership and administrative roles in student affairs, academic affairs, enrollment management, institutional research and related areas.

About the Faculty

Faculty in higher education administration bring extensive experience as research scholars and higher education practitioners. They emphasize the integration of scholarship and practice, supporting students in developing strong analytical, leadership and organizational skills.

Students work closely with faculty mentors to design programs of study aligned with their professional contexts, research interests and vocational aspirations, preparing them for leadership and scholarly contributions in higher education.
