

SOCIAL WORK, M.S.W. AND LAW, J.D. DUAL DEGREE

Lawyers and social workers both work to serve individuals and communities through different disciplines. The Juris Doctor/Master of Social Work dual degree offered through the Saint Louis University School of Law (<https://www.slu.edu/law/>) and the School of Social Work (<https://www.slu.edu/social-work/>) allows you to combine those disciplines. This SLU program equips you to practice law with the in-depth knowledge of social conditions and the needs of individuals, groups and communities needed to promote well-being.

Program Highlights

- SLU's M.S.W. program ranks highly nationally and allows students to hone skills in therapy, crisis intervention, veterans' services, nonprofit administration and global social work.
- An M.S.W. gives a lawyer specialized insight into mental health, aging, homelessness, poverty, child welfare and many more issues. This insight is advantageous in practicing law of any kind, especially public interest law, family law and indigent defense. A lawyer can provide much-needed legal tools to those most in need that a social worker alone cannot, such as representation in court and mediation in housing and unemployment disputes.
- Students complete their first-year core curriculum courses in the School of Law and then begin an integrated curriculum at both the School of Law and the School of Social Work. Full-time students can complete the J.D./M.S.W. program in four years.

Fieldwork and Research Opportunities

SLU Law's legal clinics give students first-hand experience representing clients who otherwise could not afford a lawyer under the direction of skilled and compassionate professors. Clinic students can work on civil and human rights issues, landlord-tenant disputes, vacancy issues, consumer protection issues, municipal ordinance violations and criminal defense, among others. On-site field placements offer opportunities to intern with organizations focused on immigration law, health care accessibility and capital defense.

Careers

A J.D. and an M.S.W. allow graduates diverse career opportunities, including public defense, nonprofit management, public welfare administration, victim advocacy, service as a guardian ad litem, judiciary service and more. Other career paths include practice in family law, immigration law, health policy/health law, employment law, disability law, elder law, environmental law or even corporate law while taking on pro bono cases as part of one's practice.
